Cool! Thanks for the video!

will this also work with smaller amounts of pollen?

I have used it on small flowers such as Chamacereus and have collected an amount of pollen that would have otherwise been very difficult. After cleaning the vacuum well beforehand, I brushed the pollen trapped inside into a collection bowl.

Whether that is "better" than scissors and a small baggy for small flowers is up for debate.

For echinopsis & co, it is by far the easiest method I have ever used, saving me much time and frustration also resulting in large amounts of pure pollen.

It works very well on Trichocereus, Echinopsis, Lobivia. It sucks up pollen without damaging the stigma, even on small flowers.

Best regards
