Hello Franz,

slug pellets exist allowed in organic farming, because they aren't dangerous to the environment and the animals / humans. Their active ingredient is ferric phosphate, instead of metaldehyde. For example:

You must use a lot of product to treat the entire garden, especially the more shady areas, those with shrubs, low plants, borders with the neighbors' gardens.

The chemical defense, not exclude the use of physical and mechanical methods of struggle (bait plants, copper barriers, ecc) that, on the contrary, contribute to a better result.

An interesting article in English can be read here:
